The $25,000 amount provides three 3-credit course buyouts at a rate of $6,000 per course plus 35% benefits and $600 in teaching assistant pay.
This proposal seeks base funding to be awarded annually as a Provost's Service Award that provides a one-course buyout for faculty engaged in service duties that rise to a level above and beyond their usual role. Because of MSU policies to have diverse representation on search, curriculum, and other committees, female faculty in particular are called upon to do a disproportionate share of the committee and other service work on campus. The disproportionate time that female faculty members are required to spend on committee and other service work cuts into the time they have available for teaching and research relative to their male colleagues. The proposed award generated by this proposal would offset some of the disproportionate service burden placed on female faculty by allowing for a course buyout for faculty members who perform substantial service duties.

The process for awarding the service buyouts would be similar to the process for determining recipients of other faculty awards on campus. The provost would issue a call for nominations from the MSU community, would assemble a committee to determine the most meritorious nominations, and would award course buyouts in the next academic year to the three winners, working with department heads and deans to ensure adequate course coverage.
Department heads who are recruiting new faculty members are often asked (particularly by female faculty members) about service and committee burdens on faculty members. At present, department heads are faced with answering that female faculty members in particular bear a disproportionate share of the service load. Having a centralized pool to offset some of the time costs borne by female and other service-heavy faculty members would help MSU to better compete for female faculty.

Assessment Plan (Please describe with indicators)

The Provost would administer the Service Award and could assess whether faculty with disproportionately high service assignments are being nominated for the award.

If assessed objectives are not met in the timeframe outlined, what is the plan to sunset this proposal?
