Description

The Ivan Doig Center at Montana State University is pleased to announce the fall 2019 call for applications for the Dissertation Fellowship. The award offers a $2500 stipend ($500 per month for fall semester) as well as a 6-credit tuition waiver for a CLS graduate student who is working on a dissertation related to the study of the North American West.

Eligibility and Application Process

To be eligible, applicants must provide evidence that they are making timely progress on the completion of their dissertation and/or that this award will provide needed bridge funds during a semester in which a student does not have adequate financial support.

Applications should include the following materials:

1. Application letter that describes the project and its contribution to the student’s field(s) of study; list of dissertation chapters completed; a detailed timeline with work to be accomplished during the award period.

2. C.V. that lists conferences and workshops attended as well as previous or pending grants and fellowships along with the amount funded; mailing address, preferred email address, and phone number.

3. Signature from your faculty advisor indicating approval of the application and confirming that the graduate is making timely progress; 300-word abstract of project (see separate attachment for cover sheet).

Please direct questions to Professor Susan Kollin (susan.kollin@montana.edu). Applications should be submitted electronically to ivandoigcenter@montana.edu by 5 PM, July 26, 2019.

A report detailing the work accomplished will be due by December 2, 2019. Failure to submit a final report may jeopardize your eligibility for future funding from the Center.
