The purpose of the Center for Digital Storywork Development Project is to plan for an interdisciplinary center that will serve Indigenous communities in culturally congruent ways while elevating MSU’s international leadership within the arts, humanities, and social sciences. The Center’s services will focus on development of Indigenous scholars who plan, create, and share digital work that represents community expertise, interests, needs, and histories. In addition, the Center will promote collaborative research and intercultural, experiential learning opportunities for MSU students and faculty. Goals for the Development Project include 1) conducting community-based participatory research in tribal communities to identify recommendations for the Center, 2) preparing a grant proposal to fund startup of the Center, and 3) generating publications and presentations related to the development process.
