Paying for your study abroad program may seem daunting, but there are funding opportunities available. The first place to start is to confirm that the program you are applying to utilizes your current funding sources. For example, paying a program fee when you are an in-state student may add to the financial cost of your study abroad.

On the reserve side is a list of some of the scholarship opportunities available for study abroad. Other resources on campus to help you as you plan for your study abroad experience include:
