LANL engineers design specialized tools for unique applications. Often times, these tools are off-the-shelf systems that have been modified to enhance their performance and capability. One such system is a battery powered resistive metal-end plastic cutter. The resistance of the metal will heat the blade quickly to a temperature sufficient to easily cut 1/4 inch wall plastic. This device should fit seamlessly on existing battery-powered hand tools and optimize battery life and tool usage.