3:00pm-4:00pm Wonderlust Class taught by Dr. Keith A. Hutchison This talk focuses on the human capacity to control attention and how attention control influences performance across a variety of tasks. Attaining our goals requires us to maintain our focus on task-relevant information while suppressing distractions and task-inappropriate behaviors. The ability to control attention rises and falls across the lifespan, varies greatly across individuals, and is critical for learning and memory. We will conclude by exploring the effectiveness of methods to reduce distraction and train attention. Museum of the Rockies Classroom

4:00pm-5:00pm Wonderlust Class taught by Dr. Walter Fleming Montana’s seven reservations are home to 11 federally recognized tribes (not including the Little Shell Tribe, recognized by the State, but not the federal government). Each tribe has a unique history and culture, making Montana one of the most ethnically diverse states in the Pacific Northwest. This talk provides a survey of Montana’s reservations and tribes and explores the legal and cultural significance of tribal membership and identity. Museum of the Rockies Classroom
