Seminar Series Presents: "Wild card: Fits and starts of progress in social science"
by Kate Batchelder

Thursday, September 22nd
11:00 - 12:00pm
Rm. 108 Plant Bioscience

Kate Batchelder is a social science project manager for Research Triangle Institute (RTI) International currently focusing on education in developing country contexts. The seminar will focus on how theory and practice can teach us the tools we need to know to implement research, but the constraints of reality dictate so much of what actually happens. Looking at examples of education research from a few countries, we will see how flexibility is one of the most important characteristics of international social science research.

Are you a female graduate student and interested in joining WISE? Contact us at msu.wise@gmail.com or visit us at montana.edu/wise