World Bank Forecasts Global Poverty to Fall Below 10% for First Time

World Bank | READ STORY

The number of people living in extreme poverty around the world is likely to fall to under 10 percent of the global population in 2015, according to projections released by the World Bank, giving fresh evidence that a quarter-century-long sustained reduction in poverty is moving the world closer to the historic goal of ending poverty by 2030. Jim Yong Kim, World Bank Group President, said that the continued major reductions in poverty were due to strong growth rates in developing countries in recent years, investments in people’s education, health, and social safety nets that helped keep people from falling back into poverty.

For the first time, the National Association of Community Development Professionals (NACDEP) and the Association of Natural Resource Extension Professionals (ANREP) are teaming up for a Joint Annual Conference June 26-29, 2016 in Burlington, Vermont. The Call For Proposals Deadline is December 18, 2015. More information about the conference here.

MACDEP is pleased to announce that Abbie Phillip, Extension Educator in Deer Lodge County, MT will now serve as MACDEP Treasurer taking over for Mandie Reed after many years of excellent service on the MACDEP Executive Committee. Thank you Mandie and welcome Abbie!
New Data Reveals Stark Gaps in Graduation Rates Between Poor and Wealthy Students

EdTrust | READ STORY
A new report released provides a detailed look at the graduation rates of low-income college students. At many colleges, low-income students graduate at much lower rates than their high-income peers. The study found 51 percent of Pell students graduate nationwide, compared to 65 percent of non-Pell students. The average gap between wealthy and poor students at the same schools is much smaller: an average of 5.7 percentage points. That's because many Pell students attend schools with low graduation rates.

Out-of-Network ATM Fees, Overdraft Charges Hit Record, Survey Says

USA Today | READ STORY
It's costing consumers more and more to get a hold of their own money. The average fee consumers pay to withdraw cash from an ATM outside their bank's network is a record $4.52 per transaction, according to a new survey from Bankrate.com. That amount is a combination of two fees, rather than one, which may come as a surprise to some consumers. "Your bank, the majority of the time, is going to charge you," says Greg McBride, chief financial analyst for Bankrate.com, a personal finance website, "And almost without fail the ATM owner is (also) going to charge."
Racial Inequality Appears To Affect Wait Times

Washington Post | READ STORY

A brief study published Monday in JAMA Internal Medicine highlights one possible underlying factor: the total time it takes for people to see a health-care professional. That burden was 25 percent longer for minorities and unemployed people. And it wasn’t because they were spending more time with the doctor. Instead, the differences appeared as part of the “clinic time” defined as the time spent waiting for or receiving care.

| Number of minutes spent waiting for or obtaining medical care |

Measuring The Good Life Around The World
Pew Research Institute | READ STORY
What makes a good life? Usually this question is in the domain of priests, philosophers and metaphysicians, but the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD), a think tank consisting of 34 mostly rich countries, sought to find the answers with data. The organization's Better Life Index looks at 23 indicators of current well-being across 11 domains, from how much people earn and the cost of housing, to life expectancy, and even to how much time off people get from work.
