Publics Globally Want Unbiased News Coverage, but Are Divided on Whether Their News Media Deliver Pew Research Center | READ STORY

Publics around the world overwhelmingly agree that the news media should be unbiased in their coverage of political issues, according to a new Pew Research Center survey of 38 countries. Yet, when asked how their news media are doing on reporting different political issues fairly, people are far more mixed in their sentiments, with many saying their media do not deliver. And, in many countries, there are sharp political differences in views of the media – with the largest gap among Americans.

MT CD Update

February 2018

Do you know of a community development professional who is involved in praiseworthy work? Consider nominating them for a NACDEP or CDS award. Regional and national awards recognize work done by individuals, teams and for distinguished service. Nominations for NACDEP are due March 5 and more information can be found here. Nominations for CDS are due Feb. 14 with more info available here.

Fewer than 3 people per 100,000 are killed in road crashes in Sweden every year, less than almost anywhere else in the world. In contrast, it's 11 per 100,000 in countries like India and the United States. One reason for the difference? A "Safe System" approach.

Meditation is Common Across Many Religious Groups in the U.S. Pew Research Center | READ STORY

In popular culture, meditation often is associated with Eastern spirituality and its secular offshoots, such as mindfulness. But substantial shares of Americans of nearly all religious groups – as well as those who have no religious affiliation at all – say they meditate at least once a week. Americans tend to say they meditate regularly (40% do so at least weekly) or rarely, if at all (45% seldom or never do). There's not much middle ground – only 8% say they development profession and movement since 1953.

Craft Beer Is the Strangest, Happiest Economic Story in America City Lab | READ STORY

Research has found that the existence of corporate behemoths stamps out innovation and hurts workers. Indeed, between 2002 and 2007, employment at breweries actually declined in the midst of an economic expansion. But in the last decade, something strange and extraordinary has happened. Between 2008 and 2016, the number of brewery establishments expanded by a factor of six, and the number of brewery workers grew by 120 percent.

Moving Americans Out of Poverty Will Take More Than Money City Lab | READ STORY

A new report by the U.S. Partnership on Mobility from Poverty furthers the idea that too many Americans linger in poverty largely because they are trapped, literally—isolated in low-income communities where only other poor people surround them. And, statistically, few manage to escape. The report emphasizes how much where we are born and grow up shapes our chances for upward mobility. A child growing up in a community with the lowest level of mobility can expect to earn up to 40 percent less during his or her lifetime than one who lives in a high-mobility neighborhood.
