Montana State University

- Food Fundamentals (NUTR 226); 3 credit Lecture; Sp 13, 14.
- Small Business & Entrepreneurship in Food and Health (formerly: Small Business Operations in HHD) (HDCF 429/SFBS 429); 3 credit Lecture; Sp 12, Fall 13.
- Sustainable Food & Bioenergy Systems Capstone (SFBS 499); 3 credit Lecture; Fall 11, 12, 13.
- Towne's Harvest Practicum (HDFN 246/ SFBS 296); 1 credit Lecture, 2 credit Lab; Summer 10, 11, 12.
- Nutrition in the Life Cycle (HDFN321 /NUTR 321); 3 credit Lecture; Fall 04, 05, 06, 07.
- Culinary Skills and Management (HDFN322 /NUTR 322); 3 credit Lecture; Fall 06, 08, 09, 10.
- Culinary Management Practicum (HDFN 323/NUTR 395); 3 credit Lecture; Sp 07, 09, 10, 11.
- Nutrition and Society (HDFN351 /NUTR 351); 3 credit Lecture; Sp 05, 06, 07, 08, 09, 10, 11.
- Dietetic Seminar (HDFN 400/NUTR 494); 1 credit Lecture; Fall 05, 06, 07.
- Culinary Marketing: Farm to Table (HDFN 445R/SFBS 445R and co-convened with SFBS 541); 2 credit Lecture, 1 credit Lab; Summer 09, 10, 11.
- Sustainable Food Systems (formerly: The US Food System) (HDFN 451R/SFBS 451R); 3 credit Lecture; Sp 06, 08, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15.
- Global Food Perspectives (HDFN 551/SFBS 551); 3 credit Lecture; Sp 07, 09; Fall 10, 11, 12,14.

The Pennsylvania State University

- Food Facts and Fads: An Introduction to the Food System (FDSC/STS 105), 3 credit Lecture, Fall & Sp 00-03.

Course Descriptions and Average Enrollments:

Food Fundamentals (60)

Students in this course develop an appreciation for the diversity and complexity of food as well as an understanding of the principles of food composition, preparation, selection, food safety and storage with special reference to physical and chemical changes which occur during normal food handling. They are introduced to the concepts of meal planning, sensory evaluation and cultural food perspectives. Additionally, students explore the relationships among good food, good health, and the enjoyment of life.

Small Business & Entrepreneurship in Food and Health (42)

This course introduces basic bookkeeping, marketing, and management concepts for owning and operating a successful small business. Students will prepare a modified business plan based on individual interests.

Special emphasis is placed on sustainable design, corporate responsibility, and corporate policy development in food system enterprises.

Sustainable Food & Bioenergy Systems CAPSTONE (20)

This course serves as the capstone experience for students majoring in the interdisciplinary Sustainable Food and Bioenergy Systems (SFBS) Bachelor's degree program. SFBS students, who have completed their 400-level, off-campus internship will be eligible to enroll in this capstone course. Content from the courses required in the major will be integrated through this capstone experience with learning attained through the students' off-campus internship. Capstone students will be required to develop an outreach product centered on their internship experience, participate in a group project centered on a real world food and/or bioenergy system problem, and hone both written and oral communications skills through writing and presentation assignments. Upon completion of the capstone experience, SFBS students will demonstrate a sound understanding of the food and bioenergy systems from production through consumption.

Towne's Harvest Practicum (20-25)

This course provides an essential hands-on experience at Towne's Harvest Garden. Students will practice all aspects of a community supported agriculture experience from production through distribution and marketing. Production activities include: planting, transplanting, weeding, integrated pest management (IPM), irrigating, managing soil fertility, and harvesting. Distribution activities include sorting, washing, weighing and recording data, cold storing, and preparing produce for transport to various distribution sites such as the Gallatin Valley Food Bank. Marketing activities include: displaying and selling produce at local farmers' markets and on campus, recording sales and accounting data, displaying produce for community supported agriculture distribution, and assisting members with produce identification and selection, and conducting outreach on and off the farm. Students will work side by side with the Towne's Harvest production and operations managers to learn both the art and science of small scale sustainable production and distribution methods. Additional formal trainings will include safe food handling & market procedures. Students will attend one field trip to visit other farms in Montana.

Nutrition in the Lifecycle (40-50)

HDFN 321 surveys nutritional needs and health concerns during different stages of life: preconception, pregnancy, lactation, infancy, preschool years, middle childhood, adolescence, adulthood and late maturity. Students complete a prenatal case study, a nutrition assessment and a family food and change project in addition to a service learning experience for the nutrition agency of their choice.

Culinary Skills and Management (35-40)

HDFN 322 is the first of a two course series (precedes HDFN 323: Culinary Management Practicum). Teaching this two course series is an effort to make this topic more relevant for our dietetic students, integrate culinary management with the rest of the dietetic curriculum, and test the application of knowledge and skills learned throughout the program in a capstone culinary management experience. HDFN 322 covers the principles of quantity food procurement, production, and presentation. Students learn food service basics from lectures, case studies, small group activities, and food service field visits. The major project for the course entails that students design their own food service and sample menu in small groups. The course also covers principles of food safety using the ServSafe curriculum which offers certification if students pass a qualifying exam at the conclusion of the program. Finally management principles are emphasized, in preparation for a dinner presentation project in HDFN 323.

Culinary Management Practicum (35-40)

HDFN 323 is the second of a two course series (follows HDFN 322: Culinary Skills & Management). This course allows students to use skills and information from the previous course in a comprehensive project that includes food menu planning, quantity food purchasing, preparation, presentation, and service. Students must apply food safety and sanitation principles, and organizational management theories in a culinary business setting.

Nutrition and Society (25-40)

HDFN 351 connects nutrition with a sense of place, people, and culture. Students explore factors in the community that influence nutrition status, techniques for assessing community nutrition needs, and methodology for planning, implementing, and evaluating community nutrition programs. Cultural food diversity is emphasized. Students complete a major community nutrition project for local agencies.

Culinary Marketing: Farm to Table (6-8)

Culinary Marketing: Farm to Table is a new course I have developed and will teach for the first time in Summer 2009. Food and Nutrition majors, Sustainable Food and Bioenergy Systems majors and other interested students are welcome. Graduate students in the course register for SFBS 541: this course is co-convened. It is a CORE 2.0 Research and Creativity course and so will involve each student an independent research project on the culinary marketing topic of their choice. Course activities will involve students directly in food production and harvesting at MSU's Towne's Harvest Garden, in distribution to members of the community supported agriculture program (CSA) and food bank clients, and in marketing and selling fresh produce at local farmers' markets. Additionally, students will develop outreach materials to provide guidance for food preparation with fresh produce, and learn and demonstrate the science of various food preservation methods.

Sustainable Food Systems/ The U.S. Food System (17-35)

Sustainable Food Systems is a Montana State University CORE 2.0 course with a Research and Creativity designation. In this course students learn about the connections among food, agriculture, and the environment and understand the role of the food manufacturing industry in creating a food supply and influencing food choices. Students gain a systems perspective on current problems related to food and health such as hunger, obesity, and disordered eating. Emphasis is placed on the sustainability of the current food system, the external costs of food choices, and the role of the nutrition professional in sustaining a healthful food supply.

(Dietetic) Seminar (8-18)

Dietetic Seminar helps Food and Nutrition Seniors develop the skills they will need to succeed as they make the transition from the undergraduate program to dietetic internships, graduate programs, or careers. Students learn to write mission statements, goals, resumes, and cover letters. Each student participates in a mock interview and creates a portfolio of his or her work. Students learn about the profession of dietetics and discuss how to apply the American Dietetic Association's Code of Ethics. The biggest challenge in teaching this course is guiding students through a metamorphosis of sorts. They begin as performers who depend on others for evaluation of their work but must become confident individuals able to market their works, skills, and personal attributes.

Global Food Perspectives (8-14)

Global Food Perspectives is a graduate course in the nutrition curriculum. This course explores the making of the U.S. food supply and corresponding American diet by examining the relative impacts of global historical events, cultural trends, economic pressures, and political activities. Students think critically using a systems orientation about the relationship between the food supply and health of U.S. residents. Course activities include scholarly readings and the facilitation of discussions, teaching on specific food topics and book reporting, critical thought and reflection on current global food system issues, food preparation, and an independent project linking current health issues, the global food system and U.S. food policy.

Food Facts and Fads: An Introduction to the Food System (125-185)

Food Science 105 (cross-listed as Science Technology and Society 105) broadly surveys aspects of food, agriculture, nutrition, and health. Explores the components of the food system from producer to consumer; examines issues related to modern food technology, food and nutrition policies, and changes in the food industry; and assesses the impact on the food system, consumers, and society. Students assess their own food and nutrition behaviors, become more aware of the environment in which they make food decisions, and devise strategies for improving health through better diet and increased physical activity. Students learn through interactive lectures, videos, guest speakers, discussions, individual and group activities, and optional field trips. Emphasizes active learning and critical thinking. Uses technology. Students complete electronic quizzes, write two or more reflective papers, submit an independent project, and participate in classroom activities.
