

November 26, 2013

On Tuesday morning, Nov. 26, it was determined that tiles being removed from the first floor of the east wing of Sherrick Hall during a Monday, Nov. 25, flooring project contained asbestos.

The building has been closed pending air and surface testing and cleaning.

Test results are expected by approximately noon on Wednesday, Nov. 27.

Cleaning should be completed by then as well. The building will be retested after cleaning.

The floor tile in question is NOT a friable material and the risk of asbestos exposure to anyone in the building on Monday or Tuesday is considered extremely low. Friable materials are those that can crumble into a fine powder.

Out of an abundance of caution, those areas at risk of asbestos exposure are being tested and cleaned. Testing consists of Transmission Electron Microscopy, considered an industry standard.

While the potential for asbestos exposure is limited to the east wing, first floor, the entire building has been closed to avoid blocking a fire exit.

The university will communicate the test results once received. The university will also host an informational session for anyone who was in the building on Monday, Nov. 26 and Tuesday, Nov. 27 at a time to be announced.

Updates will be posted at <http://www.montana.edu/sherrick/>

Sherrick Hall reopened Wednesday. Air tests for asbestos returned with negative results

Sherrick Hall has been reopened for regular business on Wednesday, Nov. 27, after air tests showed negative results of an asbestos release.

On Tuesday morning, Nov. 26, it was determined that tiles being removed from the first floor of the east wing of Sherrick Hall during a Monday, Nov. 25, flooring project contained asbestos.

The building was closed pending air and surface testing and cleaning.

The floor tile in question was NOT a friable material and the risk of asbestos exposure to anyone in the building on Monday or Tuesday was considered extremely low. Friable materials are those that can crumble into a fine powder.

Transmission electron microscopy, an industry standard, was used to test air and surface samples in the building. The air samples showed no potential asbestos exposure. Of eight surface samples, six returned negative and two showed a trace level of asbestos. All areas have been subsequently cleaned following industry best practices to remove even this trace amount. These test results indicated the potential exposure to people in the building Monday and Tuesday was extremely low.

No further updates are planned on this issue.

MSU Timely Warning: Sexual Intercourse without Consent

MSU issues timely warnings in compliance with federal law for crimes that have already occurred which the university considers to be a serious and continuing threat to its community.

On October 28th, 2013 at approximately 7:51 p.m. the Montana State University Police Department responded to Bozeman Deaconess Hospital for a late report of sexual intercourse without consent which occurred on the early morning hours of Saturday, October 26th, 2013, in the North Hedges Residence Hall. The victim reported spending time in the room of a male known to her, when he sexually assaulted her. Investigation into the incident is pending.

The MSU Police Department reminds all students, staff, and campus visitors to be aware that sexual assaults typically occur between individuals that know each other, and that “stranger rapes” are rare. Alcohol is the most common “date rape drug” used. If a friend or acquaintance confides in you that they have been raped, believe them. Urge them not to shower or wash their clothes, and encourage them to go to the hospital for a sexual assault exam kit (even if a person is unsure what they want to do at that point, the evidence can be preserved for the future). MSU Police and advocates are always available to assist individuals who have been victimized by sexual assault.

The MSU Police Department offers crime prevention presentations and provides escorts which are available on campus 24 hours a day for any student, faculty, staff or visitor. The MSU Police can be reached at (406) 994-2121. Advocates from the VOICE Center can be reached at (406) 994-7069. Anonymous reports can be made to the MSU Police Department at switness@montana.edu and at the VOICE Center.
